Excerpt: . . . Figure 1 - Hypothetical example showing the assumed relationship between increasing recreational use within wildlife habitats and the probability of focal species persistence and maintenance of ecosystem processes and functions. or low depending largely on the extent of influence that these activities had on wildlife habitats within a given analysis area. Where possible, we linked these rankings to bio-logical thresholds derived from our literature review. Where these data were lacking, we generally split the effects levels into quartiles to assign relative ranks. The assessment processes and models described in the document were designed to address broad-scale issues, such as cumulative effects, and to provide information that could be used to evaluate project-level effects. These models could best be viewed as working hypotheses about the interactions between roads, trails, and wildlife. As such, wildlife responses should be monitored and models adapted as new information becomes available. Step 5. Assess the...
